TALENTAN PLAGUE

By Everett Pelfrey

Plague is ravaging the tribal halfling settlements on the Talenta Plains, decimating the once-peaceful nomadic population.

Hundreds of halflings have fallen victim to the disease, colloquially known as the "Bone Sickness" for the way it slowly calcifies the body into solid bone.

"We have endured for generations without assistance from outsiders, and we will overcome this as well," said Rosamund Yirr, lath of the Yirr tribe.

Everest said that he waited at the local tavern and spoke with the hero's representative, who was "hostile from the start" and "refused to answer any questions" related to Ven Leser d'Tharashk, going so far as threatening the entire house.

Later that night, an unidentified group climbed aboard the d'Tharashk airship, the Royal Concord, and did significant damage before lighting it on fire and fleeing the scene.

"We were caught completely unaware. The poor, unfortunate souls who drew first watch that night were slaughtered mercilessly. I, myself, was attacked, stabbed in the leg. I firmly believe it was these so-called Heroes, and justice will be done. For both my nephew, Ven Leser, and our house as a whole. Justice will be done."

Powerful words, indeed.
